

Environmental Protection beyond 2013: delivering environmental improvements in times of austerity

A one-day conference to explore how local and national organisations are dealing with the current environmental challenges and seeking cost effective solutions.

These are challenging times for local authorities, environment agencies and other bodies involved in delivering improvements in environmental quality for UK residents. Finances are constrained for services across the public sector, including for environmental protection. This makes it all the more important that environmental protection priorities are clear and that remedies for environmental problems are as cost effective as possible.

The Autumn Conference will focus on the new challenges for EPUK, its members and partner organisations as they work to improve the UK environment in times of economic stringency. There will be expert presentations with discussion of current and emerging challenges and potential cost effective solutions, opportunities for exchanging experiences and networking, an exhibition and a closing reception.

In particular there will be updates on:

- Government priorities in environmental quality, sustainable development and resource efficiency
- New evidence of air pollution impacts from EU studies and a discussion of the consequences
- Emerging concerns about new technologies for gas extraction, including fracking, and their environmental impacts
- Cost effective implementation of EU legislation to reduce noise and provide Quiet Areas

The Conference will be of particular relevance to:

- Local authority Environmental Health Practitioners, Contaminated Land, Planning and Transport Officers
- Elected members with an environment brief or interest
- Environmental managers from the private and public sectors
- Environmental businesses and consultants, monitoring and other equipment manufacturers
- Academics who both teach and research environmental protection subjects

A full programme will be available shortly on our website: www.environmental-protection.org.uk/events
